On a Mission

Every time I watch an action movie, and a character starts to sprint I seem to compare them to Tom Cruise when he sprints in Mission Impossible. Like him or not; the guy can run and makes it look great on camera. It is also one of the longest running action movie franchises and they just keep coming up with new missions that are impossible.

mission that isn't impossible. Our mission is to partner with great people to sustain, enhance, and restore functionality to each of our patients. The most important part is the great people. We are so blessed to be able to spend part of our lives with great people each day at the office. Great conversations are created sometimes with lots of laughter and others that are more serious. Both kinds of conversations are supplemental to the Chiropractic care but are an integral part of the relationships that we build and memories we make.

Our atmosphere is created organically and genuinely and being one of the best parts of our business that we enjoy being proud of. The other part of our office that sets us apart is the ability to find and correct subluxations. There are lots of chiropractors and chiropractic videos getting "pops" and sounds out of people, but for me it's all about where, when, and why.

Many people have asked "how did you find that area Doc?" I feel one of the skills God gave me is the ability to find subluxations. The first Chiropractic class I took was palpation, the ability to touch and feel to find anatomical areas. Many of my classmates prodded around each other like blind people with sticks, but for some reason it was just natural for me. Making a connection with a person so I can find the areas that need it most is what sets me apart from other Chiropractors. The adjustments that I give are designed to be specific, so we unlock the potential your body has inside of it.

I want you to partner with us on a mission to sustain, enhance, and restore functionality for yourself and for others. Especially people that are just like you, great! As we start our giving back campaign this year, encourage some great people to add themselves to our Kunz Chiropractic family. We can raise money for great causes and be on a mission that isn't so impossible.
